URC i-Series
The Choice Between 418MHz and 433MHz

In certain areas of the country—in parts of Manhattan, for example—Radio Frequency Interference can be such a problem that it can be very difficult and time consuming to resolve it. Traditional transmission frequencies can be nearly blocked. URC now offers an alternative to 418MHz RF communication. Most of our popular remote controls and the MRF-350, MRF-260, RFX-250 antenna and MSC-400 Master System Controllers are now available in 433MHz versions as well as 418MHz.

Initially designed for the European market where 418MHz is no longer allowed, the International models have been designated the "i-series." All of the 433MHz products have the letter "i" added to their name, as in MSC-400i or MX-3000i. It's important to point out that you cannot mix 418MHz remotes and 433MHz remotes in the same installation unless you use both an RFX-250 and an RFX-250i antenna on an MSC-400 Master System Controller.

Please Note

Please refer to Universal Remote Control's official Terms and Conditions of Sale for additional important information. Specifications and prices subject to change without notice.

Special Notice about 418MHz and 433MHz Products

URC's i-series products (designated with a lower case "i" as in MX-980i, MRF-260i and RFX-250i for instance) all operate at 433MHz and are compatible only with other i-series products. You cannot use an MX-3000i with an RFX-250, for example. The RFX-250 receives commands from 418MHz remotes and the RFX-250i receives commands from 433MHz remotes. You can connect any combination of two RFX-250 and/or RFX-250i antennas simultaneously to an MSC-400 or an MRF-350.
